A word from The Met

As we celebrate the launch of The Met x Eichholtz Season 3, we reflect on the significance of our continued collaboration — one rooted in a shared dedication to honoring art, culture, and the power of storytelling through design.

At The Met, our mission is to make art relevant and accessible to the world. This collaboration brings history into everyday spaces, offering customers a rare chance to enjoy art reimagined for the modern home.

We are especially grateful for Eichholtz's ongoing commitment to sharing their unique creative perspective with a global design audience through thoughtful, high-quality reinterpretations of singular works in The Met collection.

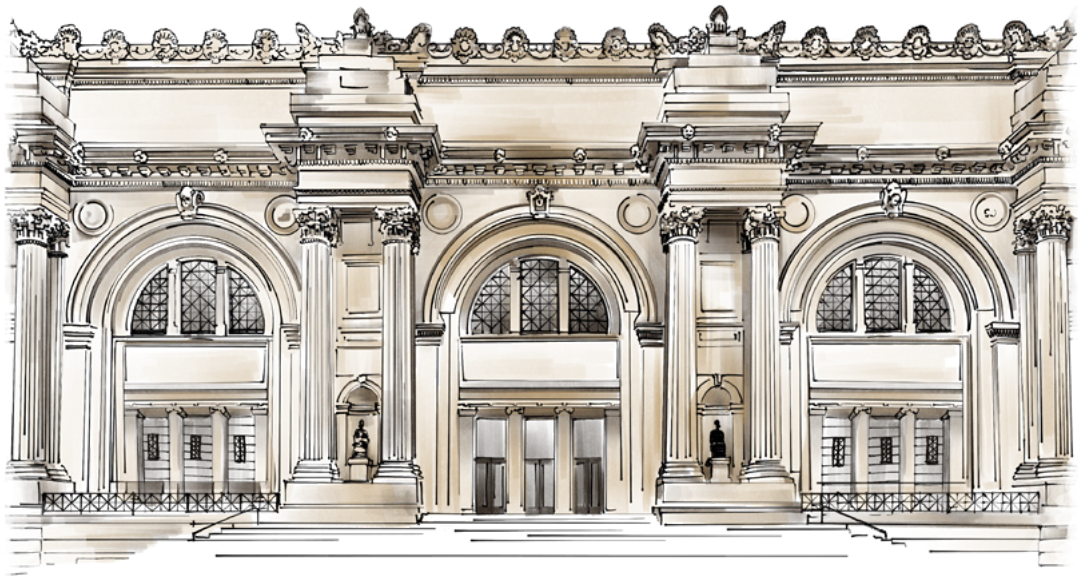

We look forward to continuing this journey — connecting history, art, and interiors in ways that feel both timeless and newly inspired.

Into the galleries

The ongoing collaboration between Eichholtz and The Metropolitan Museum of Art enters a new chapter — one that deepens the dialogue between history and contemporary design.

This season, new designs embrace a more expressive and interpretive approach, while continuing to draw inspiration from The Met's vast holdings spanning continents, centuries, and cultures. The result is a collection that honors the past while reimagining it for contemporary interiors.

This editorial captures the creative evolution of the collaboration, presenting the full arc from its 2023 global launch to today. Building upon the foundation of the first two seasons, the 40 new pieces emphasize refined shapes, clean lines, and rich textures, bringing the total offering to almost 200 items. Explore the latest introductions through powerful storytelling and immersive room settings, showcasing standout designs from earlier collections in inventive ways. This dynamic offering is designed to integrate seamlessly with the broader Eichholtz universe, suiting a range of spaces and tastes. With successful launches in Eichholtz stores around the world — from Melbourne, Monaco, and Miami to Los Angeles, Dubai, and New York — the collection has proven both adaptable and resonant for our global network of designers, retailers, and trade clientele.

By reimagining Museum artworks as modern designs, this collection inspires connections between history and contemporary life.

The Chandelier Jenkins is inspired by the hanging pendant lights found throughout The Met's Great Hall, one of the Museum's most visited spaces. Our modern interpretation is a striking piece that blends elegance and functional beauty.

Every Met x Eichholtz design is an invitation to view history through a modern lens.

A conversation with Leanne Graeff, General Manager of Product Design; Stephen Mannello, Head of Retail and Global Licensing; and Josh Romm, Head of Licensing & Partnerships from The Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Eichholtz: How do you see a collaboration like this supporting The Met's broader mission to preserve, educate, and inspire across cultures and generations?

Josh: Since its founding, The Met has always aspired to be more than a treasury of rare and beautiful objects. Every day, art comes alive in the Museum's galleries and through its exhibitions and events, revealing both new ideas and unexpected connections across time and across cultures. Licensing and collaborations allow us to activate that mission far beyond the walls of The Met, sharing highlights from The Met collection through the lens of our brand partners and thus reaching consumers in a whole new way.

Eichholtz: From your perspective, what makes the collaboration with Eichholtz unique?

Stephen: The Met x Eichholtz collection offers consumers a one-of-a-kind opportunity to live with reminders of 5,000 years of art. Juxtaposing furniture and decor inspired by iconic moments in design history like ancient Egypt, Edo-period Japan, and the English Palladian movement with family heirlooms, contemporary furnishings, and other keepsakes leads to a uniquely personal mode of interior design.

Eichholtz: What measures did you take to help us balance creative interpretation with historical and cultural respect throughout the design process?

Leanne: Each of the 1.5 million works in The Met collection offers a unique opportunity to be inspired. We seek to maintain the foundational elements of the inspiration work within every modern interpretation, selecting those objects that can be faithfully reimagined while honoring and respecting the original. Variations to color, material, and scale allow us to translate historic designs for a modern consumer. When the original and the new are viewed side by side, the relationship should be undeniable.

Eichholtz: What does it mean for The Met to bring historical design into modern interiors?

Leanne: Taking cues from furniture and decor items that were once situated in elegant residences, our collaborations with partners such as Eichholtz allow consumers to bring a touch of history to modern spaces. Living with historically inspired home decor offers a new opportunity to generate an appreciation for historic motifs, techniques, and design movements. We hope that each piece will cultivate a refreshed appreciation of art and design, and a curiosity to uncover the stories behind the original works of art.

Eichholtz: Were there any surprises or unexpected moments during our collaboration—objects that took on new meaning once we began looking at them through the lens of interior design?

Josh: It has been a pleasure to watch Met objects take on new life through this collaboration. One of our favorite transformations is inspired by a Late Period Egyptian composite papyrus capital dating back to 380–343 BCE. In the first season of our collaboration with Eichholtz, this work inspired a glass wall lamp and chandelier. For this third collection, the same object now serves as the inspiration for an elegant series of wood tables. In all iterations, the Eichholtz design team literally turned the work of art on its head—reinterpreting the elegant, flowing lines of the original from a whole new perspective.

Eichholtz: Why is it important for institutions like The Met to engage in storytelling through collaborations?

Stephen: At The Met, we believe that art remains relevant regardless of era. Collaborations offer a fresh perspective on the artists, movements, and moments in time from which these works originated; and often bring disparate works of art together in unexpected ways to tell brand new stories. When brands choose to engage in collaborations with The Met, they amplify narratives that may otherwise be forgotten or ignored, and serve as an invitation to visit The Met, be inspired to learn about art, or create something totally new.

The Object Lion pays homage to a carved Egyptian lion's head (400—300 BCE), originally used as a model for stone waterspouts on temple walls.

Chandelier Hibis. A glowing expression of Egyptian rhythm and verticality—refined glass elements draw from the floral forms carved in stone.

Rhythm and geometry: contemporary works inspired by Egyptian Art

A series of pieces in this season's collection are inspired by a composite papyrus capital (380–343 BCE) in The Met's Egyptian Art holdings. Carved with stylized papyrus and foxtail motifs, the Museum's capital, formerly displayed in front of the Temple of Amun at Hibis, embodies the sacred connection between architectural and natural forms in ancient Egyptian art.

We have been inspired to translate that language of rhythm and symbolism into sculptural, contemporary forms — pieces that reflect the column's upward motion and botanical geometry.

The original capital from the Temple of Amun at Hibis. Papyrus and foxtail plants converge in a symbolic gesture of life, renewal, and divine structure.

Dining Table, Coffee Table, and Side Table Papyrus. A modern silhouette grounded in ancient inspiration, with a sculptural base that mirrors the symmetry of its namesake.

Chandelier Amun. Layered geometry transforms carved stone into weightless glass, capturing the essence of Egyptian symbolism in a radiant, modern light.

Wall Lamp Amun is the companion piece to the chandelier, translating the series' sculptural geometry into a refined vertical form.

The origin of Cabinet Kumo

Inspired by the fan motifs depicted on a box from Japan's Edo period (1615–1868), the Cabinet Kumo pays tribute to the art of maki-e: a technique using gold and silver powder on wet lacquer, sometimes accompanied by mother-of-pearl inlay. The original box, now in The Met collection, is a delicate expression of refined Japanese artistry, which we've echoed in our contemporary interpretation.

With its minimalist silhouette and charcoal brown finish, the Cabinet Kumo adds a touch of understated sophistication to your interior.

Stewards of storytelling

A Note from the Chief Creative Officer of Eichholtz,
Edwin van der Gun

It is with great pride and a deep sense of honor that I welcome you to explore the third season of our award-winning collaboration with The Metropolitan Museum of Art. What began as a creative dialogue between past and present has inspired us to carry forward the stories behind the art.

In previous seasons, my team and I approached the collaboration from the perspective of a collector — fascinated by history, drawn to beauty, and committed to faithful reimaginings. These pieces reflected our admiration for craftsmanship, allowing Eichholtz to bring tangible echoes of art history to a global audience.

This season marks a turning point. This time, we've embraced the vastness of The Met collection, venturing further into the galleries and drawing from a broader range of cultures and time periods. We've allowed ourselves greater creative liberty, letting our passion for historic design shape a selection of products that speak to the present. There's a profound responsibility in designing from historical material. Each product in this collection began with a moment of wonder. Our goal was to interpret renowned works into unexpected, creative expressions in the form of furniture, lighting, and accessories. Our intention is that each piece may spark a conversation and invite curiosity into the home.

Collaborating with The Met is a rare privilege, and I remain profoundly grateful to the experts who have guided us with care and insight. I'm equally grateful to our customers and partners — you've made it possible for us to keep exploring, keep learning, and keep telling these stories.

Thank you for joining us on this journey.
